This is in response to Papers filed on 02 January 2004.

I. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance:

The record shows that:

(A) applicants fail to provide a convincing evidence that none of the applied compounds would have the same or about the same functional property as claimed for a proper and timely examination during the prosecution of this application. However, applicants urge that none of the claim compounds would contain Zn.

(B) evidence can be seen on the record that (1) there are actually few compounds being obtained and tested only. These obtained and tested compounds are allowable since no prior art on the record is applied over the obtained and tested compounds and (2) the claims have not been excluded a compound containing Zn.

(C) the showing use compound 38 under Rule 132 has been fully considered but has and is given little value since applicants fail (1) to show compound 38 does not have about the same property as those claimed compound and (2) to test to the closest applied compound 57.

(D) an advantage result as shown under Rule 132 of the obtained and tested compound over Nakai et al compound 38 is not what it is considered, searched and examined only but is mainly on the functional property of the applied compound as broadly claimed on the record since the claims have not been excluded a compound containing Zn.

Art Unit: 1752

(E) (1) applicants, however, urge that none of the applied compounds would have the same or about the same functional property as claimed. (2) Applicants also urge the Office to do a test to show the claimed functional property in the applied compounds or a known compound for use in a photographic material that would have the same or about the same functional property as claimed. (3) The Office does not do a test for a functional property as clearly pointed out and set forth on the record. (4) Nakai et al disclose, teach and suggest the applied compounds on the record but fail to cite a functional property as claimed. (5) Assumed that there is none of compounds for use in a photographic material having the same or about the same functional property as urged to be correct. The broadly functional property claims are issueable.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."
